ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A technical system is described by several abstract or concrete models which have a mutual relationship. Information/attributes can be associated with model elements and "inherited" through these relationships. While the approach can basically be applied to different types and models of machines, it is described more particularly for hierarchical component models. Model elements in these models are referred to as components, assemblies, etc.